January 31st: Where Are All The Birds?

When it comes to handling the cold there are three strategies the natural world can take. Animals can either hibernate and wait it out until readily available food reappears, they can resist and continue to scavenge what little is left while also hoarding their own life-saving supply, or they can migrate and move on to greener (literally) pastures. We would like to take this January to talk about the birds and animals which vacation further south for the winter. Roughly 40% of the entire world’s bird population are regular migrants. Just in the United States we see 3.5 billion birds taking the trip south. Come join us as we explore the routes they take, the stops along the way, and the physical adaptations needed for such a journey.

Our youngest explorers will be taking home their own feathered bird wings to practice migrating around the house!

February 28th: Keeping Warm in the Snow

Even though there is no furnace in a squirrel drey the animal is still cozy and bundled. But how can this be? Join us as we take a look at the fascinating world of animal body-coverings. We will look up close and personal at local and exotic animal furs and performing experiments to see how resistant to cold they are before transitioning to scales and seeing just poorly they keep an animal warm! We will even be taking a peek at some body coverings of a few creatures from the ocean! Our youngest explorers will be putting together their own furry animal craft to take home to ensure their cuddling at home remains cozy and warm! We will have snow-shoes available for participants should the weather cooperate!

March 28th: Early Spring has Sprung

Have you ever wondered what triggers the bear, deepset within torpor to stretch out his limbs and emerge from his snowy den? Or what causes the seed buried beneath the snow and leaf litter to decide it’s time to plant it’s roots and begin its journey to sprout? Nature has a very flexible and natural alarm clock which the entire animal and plant community instinctively follow. Join us at Lost Lake Nature Park as we take a close look at what causes Spring to spring. We will look at the natural forces behind meteorology which influence the world simply by added a little extra sprinkling of sunlight and warmth. Our youngest participants will even have the opportunity to craft their own windicator to take home and measure the weather!

All programs on this page take place at Lost Lake Nature Park at 846 Lost Lake Trail, Oakland Charter Township, 48363
